

Call-out for interviewees for 'Indigenous Scholars You Should Know'

View Informit's video interview series:

<https://about.informit.org/indigenous-scholars/>

Informit is the leading humanities academic publications database for Australia and New Zealand, a gateway for students to search for academic resources. At Informit, we believe that the proliferation of First Nations-led research in recent years is among the most exciting developments in research right now, having meaningful and positive impacts within communities, as well as making vital contributions to knowledge at national and international levels. Informit is well placed to amplify Indigenous Knowledges and research by First Nations scholars, with thousands of students and members of the public accessing journal articles and media resources. <https://search.informit.org/>

'Indigenous Scholars You Should Know' is an ongoing series of video interviews with First Nations researchers from varied career stages, fields of study, and geographically and culturally diverse communities. The interviews offer a platform for researchers to articulate emerging methodologies, reflect upon their experiences within the Academy, and unpack some of the ideas and cultural contexts informing their important projects.

The series has mainly focused so far on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander researchers but is expanding to include global Indigenous contributions.

- If you are interested to share your work through this forum, please get in touch for more information and to arrange a video interview.
- The interview process requires a maximum of 1 hour of your time.
- We are keen to interview researchers across career stages, from postgraduate students to professorial level, in any disciplinary field.

Contact:

Gretel Taylor Gretel.taylor2@rmit.edu.au for more information or to arrange an interview.

The interviews are located on Informit's website: <https://about.informit.org/indigenous-scholars/> There are prompts in various places across the database (and via other Informit and RMIT marketing channels) directing interested audiences to the page.